

In the Newark Advertiser, we find a letter, dated

DRESDEN, SAXONY, Jan 6th, 1852.—I am sick of negro talk & life in Saxony. Whenever I go, in public or private, Uncle Tom is the hero of the day. If I chance to look up to ascertain the name of a street, a huge placard, or a picture representing American slavery, stares me in the face. If I step into a book-store, Uncle Tom, in every shape and form, in German & English, with illustrations and without illustrations, for any price, is thrust under my nose. In returning from a recent excursion among the Bohemian Mountains, I stopped at a house in the forest, where perhaps an American was never before seen. Upon showing may pass, the little post drew from his bosom a copy of Uncle Tom's Cabin, and with a significant look enquired if I had read it. It is the universal theme for conversation both in the family circle, & in the public beer shop. When friends meet, the customary introductory remark concerning the weather is often forgotten in the eagerness to talk of it; and it is praised by every tongue as the maximum of literary production.

"THE MOTHER OF PRESIDENTS and the Mother of Slaves, gets a capital cut in a late number of the Westminster Review. In noticing the volume of "Lectures on the Evidences," delivered before the Virginia University by "number of Presbyterian ministers," the Westminster says:

"The lecture on the 'Unity of the Human Race' is well-reasoned and eloquent; but it is noticeable that in this portion, when picturing the millennial congress of nations and races, though the orator remembers the 'cannibal Zealander, the 'fierce Malay,' the 'wild Canamache,' the 'gigantic Patagonian,' the 'graveling Bushman,' the 'squallid Esquimaux,' the 'crouching Hindoo,' and every other race we can think of, he forgets the enslaved negro—although it was doubtless, 'an article' of that kind that drove him to the lecture hall a hour or two before. The best lecture in Virginia on human brotherhood or on Christian evidences generally, would be a practical one."
